DESCRIPTION:

The political turmoil in the Muslim Middle East and its far-reaching consequences are commonplace knowledge. What people may not be aware of is the long and rich tradition of political philosophy in the Islamic cultures of the middle-east. This course aims at a comprehensive introduction to Islamic political philosophy.

We begin with a survey of medieval Islamic philosophy; this survey includes the political writings of philosophers such as Alfarabi and Avempace. We are concerned with what these thinkers have to say on the purposes of the state, its relationship with the Qur’anic revelation (and the Islamic law), and its ideal organization. We also attempt to identify what makes classical Islamic political philosophy unique in relation to its Greek predecessors.

The second part of the course concentrates on the Islamic responses to modern Western politics. We read from texts by Jamal al-Din al-Afghani, Muhammad Iqbal, Ali Shari’ati, and Ruhollah Khomeini. We will also draw from the relevant writings of Jean-Paul Sartre, Frantz Fanon, Norman O. Brown, and Michel Foucault in this segment of the course.

Next, we consider three issues in contemporary Islamic political thought. We address Islam and the politics of gender through readings from the works of Amina Wadud-Muhsin, Fatima Mernissi, and Leila Ahmed. Second, we will bring our considerations to bear on the neo-con’s favorite, Samuel Huntington’s essay “The Clash of Civilizations,” and Edward Said’s reply to it. Finally, we will deal with the more recent upheaval in the Islamic world, i.e., the so-called Arab Spring, through readings from the work of Hamid Dabashi.

This is primarily a course in political philosophy, but it does not and cannot remain within any narrow departmental limitations. Its non-traditional subject matter requires that the inquirer be open and attentive to approaches from a variety of disciplines. As a result, this course can be of interest not only to philosophy students, but also to those majoring in other areas of humanities and in the social sciences.

This course is also part of two GE Segment III clusters: (1) Islamic Societies and Cultures and (2) Religious Studies. Therefore, students can take this class to meet these Segment III requirements should they choose to do so. However, Segment III credit for the course depends on the completion of cluster requirements as described in the Class Schedule and Bulletin. The course is also on the list of electives for the minor in Middle Eastern and Islamic Studies.

TEXTS:

The main text for the course is Joshua Parens and Joseph C. Macfarland’s Medieval Political Philosophy: A Sourcebook. Ithaca: Cornell University Press, 2011. Other material is available on iLearn.
REQUIREMENTS:
Class attendance and participation are required and count for 10% of the grade (based on the attendance record and meeting the TA at his or her office at least once). There will be two exams, each of which counts for 45% of the grade. There will also be an optional essay assignment to improve your grade. I will discuss that in class after the midterm.
